It is with great pleasure the Conference Planning Committee officially releases the program for the 2016 APA Virginia Chapter Annual Conference. This schedule represents several months of hard work and dedication by the committee, but more importantly reflects desires of the membership for a more robust, diverse and interactive program and responsive to topics, ideas and concepts important to practicing planners in the Commonwealth. Our sessions, workshops and keynotes also evoke our theme for the Annual Conference: innovation, integration and evaluation.

For 2016, we are starting the conference on Sunday morning at 10am with the quarterly APA Virginia Chapter Board meeting. Sunday afternoon kicks off with two (2) mobile tours exploring our regional setting, a Community Planning Assistance Team (CPAT) project to provide a collaborative planning approach for the Town of Lovingston, and a leadership retreat. Sunday concludes with the opening reception. Monday through Wednesday will showcase great planning in the Commonwealth, resiliency at the rural, suburban and urban scale, explore the legal challenges to planning for signs and proffers, economic development at various scales and planning for all modes of transportation, among others. Daily hands-on and skill based sessions offer more opportunities for improving our practice, in addition to the “unconference” experience where attendee’s introduce and drive the conversation. We also have exciting keynote speakers, highlighting the Flint Water Crisis and new leadership and vision from the American Planning Association’s Executive Director. Finally, we are offering receptions to connect with old friends, make new friends, celebrate our FAICP inductees and recognize our Planning Award winners. Check out the full conference program and blog for more details, CM credit opportunities and to build your personal schedule. #APAVA16 will be our best conference yet!
Big Ideas

APA recently announced that HUD Secretary Julian Castro’s policy initiative, the Prosperity Playbook, will be the subject of this year’s Daniel Burnham Forum on Big Ideas. The “big idea” in this forum is to focus on how to break the cycle where far too much of a person’s destiny can be attributed to the ZIP code of their birth. The American Dream presupposes that hard work, grit and determination provide the foundation upon which dreams are built in this nation. Unfortunately, as we know, the results can be uneven and related less to individual work ethic than the quality of the school system and employment opportunities in a given place. This is an important issue for us as planners as well as to us as a nation. Plan now to attend the Burnham Forum in Washington DC on 18 September 2016, likely at the National Building Museum.

Another “big idea” that I would like to suggest is that we exercise “We can’t” from our vocabulary. Perhaps this is but an extension of Burnham’s oft quoted exhortation to “Make no little plans.” In any case, fear of the big and the bold should not paralyze our profession. Too often I see and hear planners unwilling to stand and be counted based on their belief that their colleagues, bosses and communities want to preserve and protect the status quo yet time and again we find that the costs of inaction are often much greater than the perceived benefits. With climate change driving both perceptions and the reality about forthcoming challenges and opportunities, planning for the future should emerge from protecting the status quo into another era of Burnham-like big plans. It is time for our profession to engage with our communities in a deliberate fashion and provide leadership to help them make decisions toward a shared vision of a future where many things may be different—as fortune favors the bold, so too will bold plans be the ones with the best chance of being transformative.

Spring is all around us as I write this. Spring has always been my favorite season, perhaps because my birthday is in the Spring, but more likely because Spring is the season of rebirth. And in that context, it symbolizes in any number of ways what we do as planners. Planning quintessentially is an optimistic, forward-thinking profession. We provide tools to communities—both the physical place and also the residents that inhabit those places—to empower and enable choices about the future. Just as not all plants survive the winter and a late frost can stunt some of the blooms, our plans don’t always come completely to fruition, but it is in the trying that we succeed.

The 2016 National Planning Conference in Phoenix was one of the best in my experience. The sessions struck a great balance between highly interactive and basic communication of great information.

I discovered that I’m not a great drone pilot in the Tech Zone of the Exhibit Hall. True to its name, Phoenix is in the process of transforming itself from one of the least sustainable cities into much more of one, having fully embraced alternative energy sources and trying to dramatically reduce water use. I had the opportunity to participate in a mobile workshop out to Taliesin West, Frank Lloyd Wright’s winter home that he began building, together with his apprentices, at age 70. The NPC was notable in that the Chapter received one of the Karen B. Smith Awards for Outstanding Chapter Achievement in the category of community outreach for our ECDC program. Finally, 6 Chapter members were inducted into the AICP College of Fellows—approximately 10% of the Class of 2016. I was blessed to have been one of the inductees; thank you to the Chapter for nominating me but especially to Immediate Past President Jeryl Rose Phillips, AICP who managed all of the Chapter’s nominations. We will have a reception at our Conference to allow Chapter members to meet and greet all of the Fellows.

I hope to see many of you at our 2016 Conference and again thank you for allowing me the privilege of serving you.

NEWSBRIEF |2| PLANNING.ORG/CHAPTERS/VIRGINIA
Greetings! On January 1, 2016 I assumed the office of the Region II AICP Commissioner. While I already know many of you, I want to thank the Virginia Chapter for giving me the opportunity to introduce myself to folks I have yet to meet. I believe it is important to keep the entire membership informed. As such I will be providing you updates through Newsbrief on the work of the American Institute of Certified Planners (AICP) Commission. For example, recently in Phoenix many exciting activities occurred during the APA National Planning Conference. The first event was the induction of the Class of 2016 AICP College of Fellows. Virginia did an outstanding job supporting its Fellow candidates; proudly claiming almost 10% of the new class of planners who received the highest honor that AICP bestows upon on a member. Well done Virginia and congratulations to the newest FAICP members!

During the Business Meeting of the AICP Commission in Phoenix several actions of note were taken, including:

- The Commission approved the use of pro bono hours as part of the 8 CM hours allowed under self-reporting two-year cycle. This is important because our Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct calls us to “contribute time and effort to groups lacking in adequate planning resources and to voluntary professional activities.”

- The Commission approved the revisions to the AICP Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct sections C (Code Procedures) and D (Planners Convicted of Serious Crimes). The two sections required almost complete rewrites to bring clarity to process and procedures. Greater emphasis is placed on education and remediation to try to avoid adversarial situations. In addition, the prosecutorial “hearing officer” is replaced by the Ethics Committee and Ethics Officer.

- Due to the Great Recession, the Commission approved the ability for AICP members who lapsed between January 1, 2010 and December 31, 2012 to reinstate without having to take the AICP exam and with reduced rates.

- Discussion continued on the development of a potential AICP Candidate program to support emerging professional planners.

There are many other activities taking place within the Commission that I hope to update you more on in the future. Work continues on the Student and New Planner Task Force, developing core competencies, completely updating the AICP exam, and initiatives to market the AICP credential.

I am looking forward to working with you and the Virginia Chapter over the next four years as your Region II Commissioner.

See you at Wintergreen!
Wintergreen Resort is offering great rates for the #APAVA16 Conference and the Chapter wants to make this year’s conference our most interactive and best conference yet. Sunday July 17 is the official first day of the Annual Conference, and great activities will be available to planners throughout the first day. The Sunday programming will offer two (2) mobile tours to local communities in the vicinity of the resort; the return of the Community Planning Assistance Team (CPAT), offering an opportunity for planners from around the Commonwealth to collaborate together on a local planning issue; a leadership training retreat with the Land Use Education Program (LUEP); and an opening reception to connect with old friends and make new ones.

$30 per person  20 People Maximum

Join staff from the Central Shenandoah Planning District Commission's Fields of Gold program on a tour showcasing agricultural producers, shops, and restaurants in nearby Waynesboro, Staunton and Augusta County.

Staff will share insights on launching and running a successful agritourism program, including identifying and securing grant funding, marketing, and member support. This mobile tour will walk the location of the former neighborhood and include a discussion of its history, lessons learned and how the City is moving forward. Sponsored by AECOM. Maximum 20 attendees.

neighborhood. Devastation wrought by Hurricane Camille in 1969 greatly impacted the structures, infrastructure, and social and economic vitality of the village. Lovingston did not fully recover from this natural disaster.

The CPAT will tour the Historic District; view the ongoing Courthouse renovation; and briefly review the policies contained in the Zoning Ordinance and the goals and strategies identified in the Comprehensive Plan, the Lovingston Master Plan (2006 – Land Planning & Design Associates), and the Lovingston Safety Study (2005 – TJPDC / VDOT). CPAT participants will have the opportunity to contribute their expertise by: evaluating the existing planning priorities and policies – and identifying appropriate updates and additions; evaluating existing structures, development patterns and form, infrastructure – and identifying the most important opportunities and priority places/projects/needs; and identifying opportunities to induce private investment and infill development.

Cultivating Leadership (12:30–4pm) Among Planning Commissioners and Staff

$10 per person 40 People Maximum

There is often a gap between the good intentions embedded in well crafted planning document and the ability of planning commissioners and staff to realize the vision. This LUEP hosted workshop will enhance the leadership capacity of attendees so that they can affect the changes needed for effective plan implementation. We will review the concepts of “change management” to help attendees identify ways of improving their facilitation, communication, and risk management skills. A “ready for change” diagnostic tool will be used to help attendees identify specific steps they can take to build their leadership back home. Knowing where you want to go is the first step. Knowing what actions to take, and when, is a very different task. We’re here to help you figure out how to get things done.

Walk in Fields of Gold

To kick off the Wintergreen 2016, take advantage of a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to visit some of the leading agritourism locations in the Commonwealth! Gain insights on launching and running a successful agritourism program, including identifying and securing grant funding, marketing, and member support. Participants will also have the opportunity to hear from members about how participating in a regional agritourism program has benefitted their businesses.

Join staff from the Central Shenandoah Planning District Commission’s Fields of Gold program on a tour showcasing agricultural producers, shops, and restaurants in nearby Waynesboro, Staunton and Augusta County. Fields of Gold, an award-winning agritourism project sponsored by the CSPDC, was recently honored by the Southeastern Economic Development Council for outstanding efforts in fostering strength and viability in local businesses through economic and community development programs.

The first stop will be New Country Organics, where Organic simply means living in ecological balance. Living real life. Real life sustained by real food. Learn about the organic food chain and how you and your community can benefit from organic feed and organic food.

Next, we will go to A Better Way Goat Farm, a small eco-farm and micro-dairy. Happy goats make sweet, delicious milk! And these goats are happy! The farm store includes cheeses, soap, gelato, and other products made from goat’s milk.

Finally, we end our tour of agritourism in the Shenandoah Valley at Project Grows, a 10-acre, youth-oriented community farm in the rolling hills of Augusta County. This teaching farm provides hand-on experience, nutrition education, and access to healthy food to young people throughout Staunton, Waynesboro, and Augusta County.

No tour of the Shenandoah Valley would be complete without visiting one of the amazing vineyards. Barren Ridge Vineyards transitioned from an apple orchard to a vineyard in 2004 and became the first winery in August County in 2007. With 8 acres on a high ridge between the Blue Ridge and Allegheny Mountains, Barren Ridge produces Viognier, Chardonnay, Merlot, Meritage, something for every palate.

If wine is not your taste, how about a beer? Hermitage Hill Farm and Stables offers the newest brewery and tasting room in the Shenandoah Valley, Stable Craft Brewing. Since 2006, Hermitage Hill Farm and Stables has been a premier event center and horse stable. This new venture expands the agritourism options in and around Waynesboro.

The tour leaves Wintergreen at 1:00 PM and the cost per person is $25. Snacks will be provided on the bus, and participants will have the opportunity to purchase wine and beer tastings or food at Hermitage Hill and Barren Ridge. Join us as we sample the treasures of the Shenandoah Valley in our Fields of Gold!

The Virginia Young Planners Group is teaming up with FAICP for a new mentorship program. A guiding principle and a core tenant of the AICP Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct is the professional commitment to aid in the career development of planning students, early professionals, and cross-disciplinary colleagues. Enacting this commitment is how a new pilot program has emerged between the Virginia Young Planners Group (YPG) and our state Fellows of AICP members. This new Mentorship Program will help build relationships between experienced planners and recent professionals working across the state.

During the brainstorming of this program a group of YPG members developed a framework with this new program being rolled out in phases. This year will begin Phase 1, consisting of FAICPs and Planning Directors mentoring young professionals only. Mentors and mentees will work together to identify a handful of goals each mentee would like to achieve over the year, and possibly a few new goals for the mentee to achieve on their own after a year of advice and guidance has helped set them up for further success. After evaluating the impact of Phase 1, the program would expand to include students and AICP mentors in Phase 2.

The YPG-FAICP Mentorship Program is looking for FAICPs and Planning Directors to mentor young professionals who are 0-10 years out of school, and young professionals who would like to be mentored by experts in the field. The program is meant to be flexible for working professionals, with communication between mentors and mentees decided upon as fits each pair’s schedules. A great opportunity to share institutional knowledge about planning in Virginia, an invaluable way to learn some inside tips and traits to thriving as a planner! If you are interested, please contact Amanda Beck at beck.amanda.r@gmail.com for more details.

If you are a young professional, with 0-10 years of work experience, please consider filling out this short survey to be matched with a mentor!
